

MILE FALLIERES WEDS.

Daughter of the President of France
a Bride—Her father's Secretary
the Groom.

Paris, August 10.—As a sequence to the separation of church and State in France and incidentally because of the mourning of the bridegroom, the marriage today of Madeleine Anne Marie Fallieres, daughter of the president of the French Republic, to John JeJan Joseph Edward Lanes, the president's secretary, was not attended with the special brilliancy which one might expect would embellish the nuptials of the daughter of the president of France.

The function was a memorable social event.

The wedding was indeed striking for its simplicity. The marriage party drove to the City Hall in the Elysees Palace, wherein was an artistic bower of plants, daisies and white hydrangeas, and in the presence of Premier Clemenceau and other members of the cabinet and government officials they were legally united by Mayor Roger Allou.

The marriage was blessed by a nuptial Mass at the Madeleine.

Foreign Minister Poincaré, Minister of Marine Thompson, were present at the ceremony, but there was tenderness owing to the fact that all French officials who were concerned in the adoption of the law providing for the separation of Church and State have been ex-communicated. There was a large attendance of the members of the diplomatic corps, who were present with their families and friends. Among the diplomats was Henry White, the American ambassador. The choir rendered a beautiful programme. The wedding breakfast was served at the Elysees Palace, attended by the immediate friends of the family. The bride received many rare and priceless gifts.

ON LASSOING.

Buffalo Bill Says It Is a Preventive of Consumption.

The writer recently had a highly interesting conversation with Col. W. F. Cody (Buffalo Bill) on the health-giving results obtained by throwing a lariat. Col. Cody has been in his time one of the most expert demonstrators of the wonderful possibilities of the lasso, and though he very seldom gives an exhibition today, even in his own Wild West show, he still handle the leather noose with considerable skill. But it was not upon the intricacies of lasso-throwing that the writer questioned the celebrated colonel, but regarding its power as a healer of weak lungs.

"I have never known a cowboy, or any man accustomed to throwing the lariat, who has suffered consumption or other pulmonary disease," said Col. Cody, "and I do not believe it would be possible to find one. Of course, the outdoor life, is antagonistic to all forms of lung complaint, so that it is probably not entirely due to the fact of throwing a rope that exempts them from this particular kind of disease. But I have always advocated lassoing to those who do suffer from weak lungs, and in every instance these people have benefited greatly from the exercise."

"I remember a few years ago I had in my company a very clever little rider, a girl who was somewhat delicate and who suffered from a weak chest. She was not from the plains, but had been taught by her father to give various exhibitions of bareback riding. I took an interest in the young woman, and noting one day that she seemed anything but strong I asked her what was the matter. She said she didn't know, so I got my doctor to have a look at her. He said her lungs were weak, and getting weaker every day. Unless there was a change she wouldn't be a member of my company for long. He advised various forms of diet, chdtdrt ETAOTN..NUSAOI..... told her to wear flannel next her skin, and so on, and I believe she followed the advice, though I didn't see much improvement. So I determined to take a hand as medical adviser."

"I saw that what she wanted was to expand her lungs, and I knew the best way to reach that end was to practice half an hour or so daily with the lariat. She had never thrown a lasso in her life, and I offered to teach her. She proved an apt pupil, and every morning I would give her a few hints. She took keen delight in the exercise, and soon became quite expert. Every day she would practice for an hour or so, and soon there came a marked improvement in her health. The color returned to her cheeks, she began to put on flesh, her appetite improved, and soon she threw away the doctor's medicine and devoted herself entirely to my cure—lassoing. In six months she was a changed woman, and today she is probably the strongest lady-rider in my company. Moreover, she has become wonderfully expert with the lariat, and now includes that among her other accomplishments. Her improvement in health I ascribe entirely to the splendid exercise derived from throwing the lasso.

"After that I suggested practicing with the lasso to many of my friends who evinced any chest weakness, and several of them took my advice. In every case the result was beneficial and those who continued the pastime—for there is a good deal of fun to be derived from throwing the rope—recovered their health and became strong men and women. It is an exercise that I would much like to see taken up by growing girls, for it expands the chest, opens the lungs, and strengthens the tissues as nothing else will. The simplest way is to rig up a pole from 5 to 6 feet in height and practise encircling it with a 30-foot rope. The noose should be about 6 feet in circumference. A great deal of amusement may be got out of this form of entertainment."

Many doctors are now advocating lassoing as a preventive—if not a cure—for people who have a tendency toward consumption. One doctor, known to the writer, has no fewer than six patients practicing with the lasso for half an hour each morning. For women especially the exercise is wonderfully beneficial, not only giving them health and vigor but also suppleness and grace. In other words, lassoing is a beauty as well as a health producer. It should not be indulged in violently but easily, the right arm being thrown out to its full length before the rope is finally let go. The arm should swing behind the head until the chest expands to the full, then return to its natural position again. The lasso should be thrown first with the right hand and then with the left, as this is necessary for the uniform expansion of both sides of the chest. An expert can noose a flying figure as easily with the left hand as with the right, and were he to practise with one hand only, then the exercise would have an ill-effect on the symmetry of the body.—Tit-Bits.

PROBLEMS OF LONG LIFE.

Anxiety to Live a Hundred Years Appears to be Increasing.

Certain New Yorkers again are stirred with the laudable ambition to live to be a hundred years old, and more if possible. These New Yorkers, who are under the leadership of a physician, have mapped out courses to follow which they believe will result in long life. Strangely enough each one has different ideas. While one will eat no meat another eats nothing else.

One believes in gorging on fruit, while another declares it is "poison" to him. One woman member of the Hundred Year Club drinks many tumblers of water during meals and between, while her husband never drinks clear water. And so it goes.

No one has ever been able to give reasons for remarkably long lives. Dr. William George Meade, a celebrated physician in his day, died at his home in Turnbridge Wells, England, in 1852, at the age of 118 years and two months. His birth and death are matters of record, so there is no mistake about his age.

This extraordinary man was asked scores of times how he prolonged his life to such a length and he was never able to tell, but answered vaguely that it probably was because he never worried. Dr. Meade smoked a pipe, which will gratify tobacco users, and practiced as a physician after he was 140 years old. Meade's methods were simple and are followed by many doctors at this day. He believed in diet, open air exercise, and cleanliness.

In his day few Britons bothered themselves about taking baths. A fat, lazy squire would gorge himself with meat and drink and go unbathed for many months. He would swell up until he had almost reached the bursting point, then with red and bloated face and body and short breath he would have himself taken to Dr. Meade at Turnbridge Wells. Meade made him take a bath night and morning. He was forced to go to bed at sunset and arise with the lark, spend all his time walking over the hills or resting under an awning.

The patient was allowed two meals a day, at 8 o'clock in the morning and 4 in the afternoon. No liquor was allowed him, but he was permitted to smoke a certain brand of tobacco which Dr. Meade himself used. The result of this treatment was to make new men and women out of the patients of Meade.—New York Telegraph.

Wordless Wonder.

Truth was at the bottom of her well, but the fact

"I'm going to help you!" declared the Cost of Print Paper.

"Of course Truth hurried right up—the way things were going she was mighty glad to be helped.

"Easy enough!" the Cost of the Paper went on in a breezy, confident way. "I'm making it so the newspapers would rather take the trouble to get things right in the first place than give up so much space to denials the day after."

"Dear me, this is very gratifying!" exclaimed Truth, rubbing her hands in abounding cordially.—Puck.
